F O R E W O R D

This is the fifth edition of the Directory of North American Protestant Foreign Mission Agencies; other editions were published in 1953, 1956, 1958 and 1960. The Directory has become known to an increasingly wider constituency and is used extensively by secular organizations and by individuals as well as by church and missionary organizations.

One caution cannot be stressed too heavily. It should be borne in mind constantly that this study is a report of replies, and cannot in the nature of things be considered to reflect all of North American Protestant missionary effort. Even since completing the study, several instances of missionary activity of which the Missionary Research Library has had no previous knowledge have come to our attention, even though for this edition more care was taken than ever before to discover and include every possible agency.

The numbers of agencies included in this report, by type, are as follows:

Denominational sending boards or affiliated societies	184
Interdenominational and non-denominational societies	117
American branches of international and interdenominational sending missions	17
American boards or committees of missionary institutions	10
Specialized services, non-sending agencies	50
Supporting, fund-raising and fund-transmitting agencies	38
Associations of missionary and church agencies	9
Total	427

320

Each agency has been given a serial number. The two indexes--the Alphabetical Index, at the front of the Directory, and the Index by Geographical Fields of Service, at the end of the Directory--make use of these serial numbers rather than page numbers. The same principle applies with regard to the listing of professors and teachers of missions; in Table IX the institutions are given serial numbers in alphabetical order, and the numbers used in sections B, C, and D refer to the institutional number in section A.

This Directory deals only with mission work outside the boundaries of the United States and Canada. For the particular purposes of this report, work within those territories is regarded as "home missions" in the sense of the traditional usage. For this reason, all references to work within these national boundaries have been excluded, and wherever necessary effort has been made to revise accordingly the number of missionaries reported by the various agencies. For the same reason, the aim of the report has been to indicate funds received for purposes relating only to "foreign mission" work, that is, work outside the United States and Canada.

Certain agencies classify Latin American enterprises as "home missions"; these are included in so far as cases are known to us. Other agencies report work within the United States and Canada with non-English-speaking Indian, immigrant, or refugee groups, or with other special ethnic groups; these are excluded. However, in some cases it is not clear how much of the work with such groups is done or financed within the North American area, and consequently in some cases total income and appropriations are reported if so given on the replies to the questionnaires we sent to the agencies.

This report seeks to indicate something of the scope of work now being carried on by national workers with support from North America. Not all agencies in the Directory have reported such work or given any definite statement as to its extent. Other agencies report a large proportion of their enterprises in the hands of nationals. Some report work in "closed" countries being carried forward by the national Christians, but it is not clear whether under present circumstances these nationals receive support from North America. It is hoped that this report on the number of national workers may be of significance in considering the present state of the foreign mission enterprise as compared with earlier periods.

In order to indicate whether recent world conditions have affected the sending out of new missionaries, and to see what agencies are today most active in sending out new workers, the Directory reports this information, in so far as it was received from the agencies, for the years 1960 and 1961.

In this edition, effort has been made to report more fully on the work of Direct Support missionary agencies, so far as information about them has been obtainable. Since such support is from local churches or groups, or from individual persons, it is likely that only a relatively small proportion of these enterprises has been listed. It is hoped, however, that attention will at least be called to this current in the missionary stream, though the numbers are not large in comparison with those of the major sending bodies. Since support goes directly to field personnel via the forwarding agents, figures for this support are not generally available, but it should be recognized to be a sizeable part of the total sum of missionary support.

In viewing the total picture, children of missionaries constitute a notable factor, since the Protestant missionary enterprise has been staffed largely by families. The dependent children must be both supported and educated, and the sending agencies for the most part share in this responsibility. The total number of dependent children reported in 1962

--over 18,000--is slightly over two-thirds of the total adult missionary personnel, which exceeds 27,000, according to the reports here published.

In presenting the lists of missionary personnel and finances, it should be noted that various agencies report certain items completely, while others do not. Also, it should be remembered that the reports here represent only those agencies which have replied to the questionnaire or for which some material was available through data in the Missionary Research Library files. It will be seen that personnel figures do not reflect a complete breakdown by the various categories we have used, since many agencies have reported only their total personnel. Similarly, financial reports will be seen to be incomplete as to the desired breakdown. Totals have been purposely omitted from the tables, since in any event they would not represent the "total" situation, and could be too easily misunderstood or misconstrued.

In use of the statistical tables, it may be observed that occasionally an agency will report more "new" missionaries than they report now on the field; this is entirely credible in cases where personnel changes are high. It is also credible when agencies report more expenditures than income, since funds from former years or for special purposes may have been applied.

At the request of the Associated Missions of the International Council of Christian Churches, no statistical reports for any of their member agencies have been included. Some of their member agencies have authorized being listed and are included in this edition of the Directory; other member agencies have been omitted.

Colleges in the Middle East which owe their inception to missions but which are not now mission or church related institutions are omitted from the listing at their request. For information about them, contact may be made through the Near East College Association, Inc., 548 Fifth Avenue, New York 36, New York.

In the numerical listing of agencies, Numbers 174 and 175 have been dropped, since these were found to be subsidiary organizations to other agencies. Two or three other agencies have been assigned numbers which now appear as addenda at the end of sections. This is due to late arrival of material and the substitution of serial numbers which had previously been assigned to agencies now omitted.

We wish to express our sincere appreciation to all the organizations and individuals who furnished the information requested of them. We regret that in some cases even several follow-up letters did not elicit a response; in some such cases we have used data from the 1960 edition of this Directory.

It will be greatly appreciated if corrections, or the names of agencies and/or missions professors inadvertently omitted, will be reported to the Missionary Research Library.

Miss Clara E. Orr, Research Assistant, has done the major work on the Directory, with assistance from other members of the Missionary Research Library staff. We are indebted to the Servicenter of the National Council of Churches for the excellent printing and binding of the Directory.

X. INDEX OF MISSIONARY AGENCIES BY GEOGRAPHICAL FIELDS OF SERVICE

The numbers in this index refer to the serial numbers of the agencies in the body of the Directory.

"Field of service" may be interpreted in various ways: a country or territory to which missionaries are sent; a country with which church workers are exchanged (as in the case of some European countries); a country where some form of evangelistic, medical, educational or social activity is carried on with American church personnel or help; or a country to which the American missionary agency sends funds or interchurch aid but not personnel.

The United States and Canada, being the "sending countries" in this Directory, are not listed in the Index by fields. In other words, this Directory does not cover home or national missions. Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are listed.

The political map of Africa is rapidly changing. We have not used the old colonial designations of areas or territories but only the name of the independent country or territory as recognized by the United Nations and in the latest maps.
